Volunteer with Healthier Jupiter to study our parks!

This project, organized by Andrew Stine-Rowe, a medical and public health student at the University of Miami Miller School of Medicine, in partnership with Healthier Jupiter, will help us understand how neighborhood parks in Jupiter are used – how frequently, for what activities, and by what age groups. This data will be used with research on how other municipalities have increased use and community engagement in their parks. These efforts will identify strategies to encourage more people to use and love our Jupiter parks. Volunteers will visit an assigned local Jupiter park at designated times to count the number of people at the park and record the activities they are engaged in. Click here to learn more.
